

NADIE SE LAS SABE POR LIBRO

Macarena is a typical 21st century mom: overwhelmed, too-involved and obsessed with her family's well-being. She is doing her best to raise three flawed but normal kids, stay attractive for a too-busy husband and keep up with the other perfect-put-together moms in her neighborhood. Despite it all, she's a happy woman...or so it seems. Pregnant when she barely turned 18, she married her high school sweetheart, Andrés, and settled into a life dedicated to her family as she gave up her dream of becoming a psychologist

Today, mother of Sebastián and her twins, Pablo and Olivia, Macarena is a cook, personal assistant, decorator, seamstress, driver, tutor and Jack-of-all trades for her family. It seems she takes care of everyone except herself.

But as Macarena almost drowns during a family vacation, she has an epiphany: something isn't right with her life, something is missing. She doesn't want to die just being a wife and a mother. She then remembers her lifelong dream of becoming a recognized psychologist – the dream she sacrificed to become an invisible mother.

Macarera realizes her children are grown up now and barely need her, her husband is so involved with his own life, he's never home. Why not? It is them and there that she makes the life changing decision to put herself and her own needs first for once.

With the encouragement of Leticia, Andres' sister, Macarena secretly takes the University entry exam passing it with flying colors and enrolls in the Psychology Faculty. Once her family and friends find out, the news gets mixed reactions: some are supportive, others clearly can't deal with it. But the one hit hardest by the news is Andres, who feels betrayed and disappointed that his wife didn't include him in making such decision.

And so Macarena becomes a "freshman mom". Though excited, she immediately realizes that things have changed since she was in college and must make an extreme effort to fit in.

The kids dress differently, their language is different and even their behavior is much more open and daring. This is the tech generation where every event, relationship and thought is posted for the world to know.

Macarera immediately becomes a novelty at school. Her classmates are the same age as her kids: there's Millaray, a small town girl who befriends her while dating Sebastián; Emmanuel, who's family can't afford the tuition but has been awarded a scholarship; Paula, a mean and catty girl who was accepted there because her father is a professor but could care less about studying. Rebeca, a vain superficial girl who can't stand being in class with an old lady. Alejandro, who feels misunderstood and discriminated by his classmates for being gay; Nicolas, a ladiesman who gets involved with Macarena's daughter unaware that she is underage; and Benjamin, who develops a massive crush on Macarena.

But to Macarera's great surprise, on the first day of class she finds herself face-to-face with Rafael, one of her professors and yes, the Rafael she had a steamy hot summer romance with twenty years ago. Though she would never admit it, Macarera has never been able to forget him.

For Macarena, the rekindling of this old flame gives rise to doubts and confusion, while the tension her new found freedom has created at home will put her marriage to the test. She will also face the criticism from her children who are struggling to accept their new mother. To make matters worse, Leticia, who happens to be the head of the faculty, is involved with Rafael, putting our freshman mom at odds with not only her sister-in-law but her bestfriend.

"Freshman Mom" is a corky and hilarious comedy that follows a mother's quest for a life outside social expectations and the opportunity to find true love.
